

Friendly rugby rivalry growing at St Agatha's, Clayfield

IN one Brisbane northside school, a teacher and his students don't see eye to eye.

The teacher is Nick Fogarty – assistant principal at St Agatha's, Clayfield, and coach of Norths in the Queensland Rugby Union's top-level Premier Grade.

The students are a collection of St Agatha's rugby-playing cohort. They all play for Norths' arch rivals Brothers, based down the hill at Crosby Park.

So, when Norths and Brothers clash today (May 22) at Woolloowin, the coach and the students will cheer for different teams. Mr Fogarty will call the shots for Norths while his students will line the fence and roar for the Brethren.

"It's not going to be an easy game for us so you won't find me saying too much to the students before the game," Mr Fogarty said with a smile.

"When I coached at GPS, we had a few good wins over Brothers so I let them know about that. But, if we can manage to win this one, I'll be talking it up in the playground."

Brothers will start favourites but they'll be worried about Norths.

The Eagles are no longer easybeats – their three consecutive wins earlier in the season sent a tremor through the competition.

Mr Fogarty said there were similarities between his day job and his weekend rugby passion.

"The best thing in my role as an assistant principal is putting correct policy and procedure in place. That's the same as being a coach," he said.

"You need a clear outline of what you're trying to achieve as a group. What are the strengths and weaknesses and how can you improve both? And relationships are also really important."

And that includes the banter with the students in the playground. There will be plenty for the teacher or the students on Monday. – Michael Crutcher

Prayer breakfast told of mental health epidemic among soldiers Rebuilding veterans' lives

By Mark Bowling

DEACON Gary Stone and his son Michael are both defence veterans and passionate about helping our young soldiers return to their families and civilian life.

Together, they took on a new challenge last week – calling for greater public awareness about the plight of returning veterans, and seeking financial assistance for their mission through the Veterans Care Association.

"The association started about one-and-a-half years ago, and our mission is very clear. We are determined to save lives and save families," Mr Stone, a former army major, told Church, business and community leaders at the 2016 Brisbane Lord Mayor's Pray Breakfast.

"The tragic outcome of a lot of the conflicts we have been serving in since 1999 is there are tens of thousands of veterans coming home from conflict with unimaginable trauma and scars, and right now we have a national crisis of veteran suicide, family break-ups and homelessness."

The Veterans Care Association is a home-grown, Brisbane charity aiming to run the nation's biggest non-profit program to help veterans overcome post-traumatic stress disorder. "Both Dad and I have been through quite a lot of conflict and seen the horrors of war, and it really is horrible," Mr Stone said.

"Being a pastoral carer in the military for 25 years, Dad identified a gaping need to support veterans. At the moment, Veterans Affairs just isn't capable of addressing these needs."

Deacon Stone said there were about 12,000 veterans in south-east Queensland, and about one-third had serious health issues and received treatment. He said there were those "who neither seek, nor get treatment, other than self-medicating with alcohol or drugs".

"And of course half of these people are young people in their 20s and 30s," Deacon Stone said.

"They've got physical injuries, they've got mental injuries, they've got moral injuries and they've got relationship difficulties. And many, once they're discharged from the military, really lack a sense of identity and purpose."

"You need to know that from Enoggera (Barracks) last year, 850 soldiers were discharged medically unfit. At 25 years of age, imagine having that? They then don't seek assistance because of the stigma of having a disability."

Deacon Stone spoke of the downward spiral of depression that contributed to a horrible suicide rate of almost one veteran each week.

"Three of them died in the last week of April. This time last Friday a 24-year-old with a wife and two children took his life," he said.

The Veterans Care Association, with Deacon Stone as president, has launched a holistic health program, called Timor Awakening, taking aim at the "health crisis" amongst young Australian veterans.

It is a 12-month immersion program, with the support of doctors, psychologists and chaplains – all veterans themselves – and will include an 11-day "renewal" trip to Timor Leste during which the vets will team up with Timorese veterans and their families. Twenty-four will leave on the first trip to Timor in July. They include veterans who served in East Timor, but also those who served in the current Iraqi conflict.

Veterans Care is seeking donations to support its work. Contact <http://veteranscare.com.au/>.
